Robbers choke boy, 12, for iPod

Two adults are being sought by police for allegedly choking a 12-year-old Bronx boy and stealing his iPod.

Police described the suspects as a 5-foot-10 black male, in his mid-20s and weighing 170 pounds, and a Hispanic female with braids wearing a black T-shirt. LAURA SHIN

Brooklyn carousel gets flood guards

Sandy. Jane's Carousel was almost swept away in last year's storm.

When the East River overflowed during Hurricane Sandy, it very nearly took Jane's Carousel with it.

Eerie photos taken the night of the storm showed Brooklyn Bridge Park's vintage 1922 carousel, which reopened in 2011 after many years of careful restoration, inundated by the floodwaters.

Come morning, the 48 intricately carved horses were all still standing, as was the glass building designed by Pritzker Prize-winning architect Jean Nouvel that encases it. But the basement was flooded, wiping out the carousel's electronic controls.

The couple who labored over the merry-go-round for 30 years has decided to make sure it is never so threatened again.

Brooklyn developer David Walentas and his wife Jane, whose many years of hand restoration gave the carousel its name, joined Brooklyn Bridge Park President Regina Myer yesterday to unveil an AquaFence flood protection system that will be used to protect the space during future storms.

"The image of Jane's Carousel submerged during Hurricane Sandy will remain in our memories and is a testament to the importance of resilient design and preparedness in the face of climate change," Myer said.

Barriers

The flood guard system consists of 44 panels that can be assembled by a crew of 10 people within two hours.

- The 4-foot-tall panels are made of aluminum and stainless steel.
- They are designed to use water pressing in on them as a stabilizing force so the barrier becomes stronger as floodwaters rise.

AG to look into World Trade Center deal

Investigate. Cuomo is suspicious of the nonprofit that owns the WTC name rights.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo has asked Attorney General Eric Schneiderman to investigate a 1986 deal that sold the rights to the World Trade Center's name to a nonprofit.

The World Trade Centers Association, headed by former Port Authority executive Guy Tozzoli, paid the Port Authority $10 and made tens of millions of dollars off the naming rights.

Schneiderman will determine whether the deal was illegal and whether Tozzoli and others received improper compensation that should have gone to the Port Authority and taxpayers.

Cuomo said he and the attorney general would, "if appropriate, seek to recoup the value of the World Trade Center name for New Yorkers."

receives close-up

Long time coming.
The six-acre Lower East Side project is 46 years in the making.

In an old building on Essex Street, where Mayor Fiorello La Guardia once allowed street vendors to barter, a rusted and broken neon sign advertises beef, pork, veal and poultry to an empty open-space market — but not for much longer.

The building is to become part of a major mixed-use development project called Essex Crossing, utilizing six acres of city-owned land on the Lower East Side.

Mayor Michael Bloomberg, city officials, developers and community leaders said the project would complement the neighborhood's rich history and tradition.

"Many New Yorkers can trace their roots back to this neighborhood, where people — many of whom were just arriving in America — made their livings and built their businesses on these very streets," said Charles Bendit, co-CEO of Taconic Investment Partners, one of three developers collectively investing $1.1 billion in the project.

What it entails

The development will include 1,000 units of housing, half of which will be affordable for low- to middle-income households and seniors.

- The project will also include open space, a new Essex Street Market, the Andy Warhol Museum, shops, a community center and a public school.

- The project will create 1,600 permanent jobs.

Major revival

"For nearly half a century it has been largely left behind, even as the surrounding neighborhood has revived and thrived."

parents settled there when they immigrated to the United States, Bendit said the project will foster the same spirit of entrepreneurship.

"We are going to be able to see our neighborhood grow and grow in a way that is balanced," Gigi Li, chairwoman of Manhattan's Community Board 3, said.

Groundbreaking for the first phase of Essex Crossing is expected in spring 2015 and the entire project is expected to be completed by 2024.

Buildings on several of the project's sites were demolished in 1967 and several mayors have tried — and failed — to redevelop them since.

"Now the promise of revitalization that was made back in 1967 is at long last being filled — who said that government doesn't deliver?" Bloomberg joked.

NSA says
Snowden took documents from internal website

Former security contractor Edward Snowden was able to obtain secret documents revealing a massive U.S. spying effort from the National Security Agency's internal website, U.S. officials said according to a report yesterday.

The classified documents leaked by Snowden were posted internally, and Snowden's job allowed him to single-handedly make digital copies without his supervisors' knowledge, government officials told National Public Radio.

They did not tell NPR how Snowden took copied files out of the office, citing an ongoing investigation.

"We have an extremely good idea of exactly what data he got access to and how exactly he got access to it," NSA's chief technology officer, Lonny Anderson, told NPR.

Anderson said the agency has taken steps to limit employees' options for storing data since the NSA surveillance programs were revealed.

"One thing we have done post-media leaks is lock those down hard, so those are [now] all in two-person control areas," he told NPR's "Morning Edition" program.

Snowden disclosed secret NSA programs involving the collection of telephone and email data to media outlets, including The Guardian and The Washington Post. REUTERS

Ohio man who posted video of DUI confession pleads guilty

Lawyer. "He hopes it provides some sort of closure for the family of his victim."

An Ohio man who posted an online video confession to driving drunk and killing a 61-year-old father of two pleaded guilty at a court hearing yesterday, his attorney said.

Matthew Cordle, 22, pleaded guilty to one count of aggravated vehicular homicide and one count of operating a vehicle while under the influence of alcohol or drugs. He has been in custody since turning himself in last week and faces a possible prison term of 8 1/2 years for the crime.

Defense attorney Martin Midian said Cordle is "at peace" with his decision.

According to the indictment, Cordle had a blood alcohol level of 0.191, more than twice the legal limit of 0.08 in Ohio, when he crashed into and killed Vincent Canzani on June 22.

In his 3-1/2-minute video confession, titled "I killed a man," Cordle admitted to drinking until he blacked out and driving the wrong way down a Columbus, Ohio, highway.

Midian said he asked Cordle not to release the video until after prosecutors brought charges against him but that Cordle wanted to "cleanse his soul."

"He meant this. There is no self-serving element. He is concerned about raising awareness about drunk driving," Midian added. "He pleaded guilty to fulfill the promise he had made," Midian said. REUTERS

Teen snatched from home found alive

A teenager abducted from her suburban Atlanta home by armed men who snatched her during a home invasion has been found alive, and two suspects have been arrested about 34 hours after the girl went missing, police said yesterday.

"This is a good day, a good day for the Perez family," said Clayton County Police Chief Gregory Porter. "She's safe, she's with her family."

The girl, 14-year-old Ayvani Hope Perez, appeared in good health, though she was still being evaluated, Porter told a news conference. She was found at a location in Conyers, not far from her home in Ellenwood.

Porter credited "hard-core police work" and "boots on the ground" for an end to the young kidnapping victim's ordeal.

US regulator says small banks could face cyber threat

Attacks. Websites of major U.S. banks were taken down last year.

The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency said yesterday that it is devoting significant resources to help smaller, community lenders fend off cyber attacks, after hackers attacked many major U.S. banks last year.

Community banks often rely on outside providers for information technology services and may lack the resources or expertise to guard against cyber threats, Comptroller of the Currency Thomas Curry said.

He said his office has established a senior position to coordinate with other government agencies and the private sector on systemic cyber concerns, and it has teams of supervisors focused on information-technology security at the largest banks.

"We have much work to do as regulators to make sure the banks and thrifts we supervise are doing everything necessary to protect themselves," Curry said in prepared remarks for a speech in Washington.

Curry said that regulators also would be assessing whether they have the right powers to guard against hacking attacks and that, if necessary, they could ask Congress for more authority.

A series of so-called "denial of service" attacks in the last year repeatedly took down the websites of major U.S. banks.

BlackBerry unveils the Z30

BlackBerry Ltd. launched its new Z30 flagship smartphone yesterday, as it battles to win back market share amid uncertainty over its future.

BlackBerry said last month it was weighing options that could include an outright sale, in the face of lackluster sales of its new devices that run on the BlackBerry 10 operating system.

The long-rumored Z30, unveiled at an event in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, will be BlackBerry's new top-of-the-line device, taking the crown from the smaller Z10 that was launched early this year.

The new touchscreen device will compete against the likes of the iPhone 5S and Galaxy S4. REUTERS

Coffee chain Starbucks Corp. has asked U.S. customers to leave their guns at home after being dragged into an increasingly fractious debate

Mind of a killerWhat made Navy Yard gunman snap

Aaron Alexis displayed signs of psychological trouble before he killed 12 people, experts told Metro. He was arrested twice for gun-related incidents in 2004 and 2010, and was discharged from the Navy after a disorderly conduct arrest in 2008.

He had also seemed increasingly agitated to his peers. He complained that his company owed him money, reported ABC, and friends described him as paranoid. Dr. Peter Langman, author of "Why Kids Kill: Inside the Minds of School Shooters," told Metro that one common trait of mass killers is that they feel wronged and want to take revenge. "He felt victimized in the Navy and he went after random people somehow connected in his mind to the organization that served him the injustice," explained Langman. He added that Alexis' history of violent behavior coupled with his gun use made him particularly dangerous. ANDREA PARK

"Obviously, when you go back in hindsight and look at all this there were some red flags — of course there were. ... And should we have picked them up? Why didn't we? How could we have? All those questions need to be answered."

Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel

Aaron Alexis. Private pre-employment background checks also failed to flag him as a security risk.

Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel said yesterday the suspected Navy Yard gunman's background presented some "red flags" easy to spot in hindsight and ordered a broad review of security worldwide, including clearances.

Aaron Alexis, the 34-year-old suspect who was killed by police during Monday's shooting, received a security clearance more than five years ago when he was still in the Navy and kept it in his most recent job as a technology contractor at the Navy Yard.

Critics in Congress and elsewhere say his ability to keep his security clearance despite a history of misconduct, including while in uniform, shows serious flaws in the system.

Hagel, addressing reporters for the first time since the shooting said his deputy, Ashton Carter, would undertake two reviews — an examination of physical security and access procedures at all Defense Department installations worldwide.

Carter's review will look at the military's practices and procedures for granting and renewing security clearances, including those held by contractors.

General Martin Dempsey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said it would have been hard to foresee Monday's bloodshed. "I don't know what the investigation will determine, but he committed murder. And I'm not sure that any particular question or lack of question on a security clearance would probably have revealed that." REUTERS

CULTURE

Twitter feed

We check in with some of Hollywood's biggest names to see what they've been up to — in their own words, in 140 characters or fewer.

Ashton Kutcher has some writing to do, Lena Dunham is starstruck and Seth Rogen is feeling creative.

@aplusk: Yesterday was today's author and today will be tomorrow's but we each hold our own pen.

@lenadunham: You guys, not trying to brag but I was in an elevator with a model.

@Sethrogen: "If you pedal uphill enough, peddling flat feels like going downhill." - Lance Armstrong's biography I'm writing in my head.

Don't make Paltrow touch a used toilet paper roll

And here I thought the people who brought flip-flops to wear in the gym shower were high maintenance — but they don't touch Gwyneth Paltrow. The actress reportedly has an assistant go in and wipe down her gym's shower before she uses it. "She refuses to touch what she calls 'somebody else's shower water,'" a source tells Life & Style.

And don't even get her started on toilet paper.

"She also refuses to use toilet paper that anyone has touched and demands an unopened pack."

This is a strange item. If you have the wealth and status of Gwyneth Paltrow, don't you have your own gym and trainer? Like, she probably won't be coming to my 12:30 p.m. Zumba class at Crunch. She can buy Crunch and all the new toilet paper rolls she wants.

Zac Efron went to rehab for cocaine

Zac Efron's people came clean yesterday and said that he'd recently completed a stint in rehab for alcohol abuse. However, that burst of honesty may have been a bit of sleight of hand to distract from something they still didn't want to talk about: It was reportedly cocaine, not alcohol (or not just alcohol), that drove the once squeaky-clean "High School Musical" star to seek treatment. According to TMZ, Efron's problem was at its worst this spring, when he missed several days of filming on Seth Rogen's "Neighbors" due to his cocaine abuse.

Uh ... so? I mean yeah, cocaine's illegal and a harder drug, but am I the only one surprised that this is such a big deal? Addiction is addiction, and he's in treatment for whatever it was. Also, everyone in Hollywood seems to do drugs. Betty White probably does drugs. How else could she be so perky at her age?

Talking points

Hemsworth moves on, very quickly

Liam Hemsworth seems to be taking his split from fiancée Miley Cyrus quite well. The actor reportedly hit it off with actress Eiza Gonzalez in Las Vegas after they had "just met," chatting over drinks at a nightclub, according to TMZ. And back in Los Angeles, Hemsworth was spotted stopping by her apartment — and engaging in quite the passionate lip-lock.

Chickens in Aniston's Bel Air mansion

If acting doesn't work out for Jennifer Aniston, she can fall back on being a chicken farmer, as the $21 million Bel Air mansion she and fiancé Justin Theroux purchased came with some feathered roommates. "We inherited the chickens from the previous owners," Theroux tells GQ. "They were like, 'Of course we'll get rid of the chickens,' and we said, 'Are you crazy? Don't get rid of the chickens. That's half the reason we wanted this place.'"

Julia Louis-Dreyfus co-stars with James Gandolfini in "Enough Said."
GETTY IMAGES

Back on the big screen

Interview. Julia Louis-Dreyfus talks returning to movies and co-star James Gandolfini.

It may seem hard to believe, but "Enough Said" star Julia Louis-Dreyfus hasn't been on movie screens in 16 years. The "Veep" lead's last film role was in 1997's "Deconstructing Harry" for Woody Allen, with a pair of voice parts in between in 1998's "A Bug's Life" and this year's "Planes." But she swears she has nothing against movies. It's just that TV was providing plenty of work for her.

"Having these various series is a time-consuming thing," she explains. "I've managed my whole career — until actually at this moment — to work at home in Los Angeles.

And I have two kids, both of whom were born during 'Seinfeld.' So when I was doing these series and working eight or nine months a year, those off times were just like, I had to be home. It was untenable for me to think of going away to work on another project — for me personally, in my life. So I just didn't."

But thanks to cable — Louis-Dreyfus' Emmy-winning turn on HBO's "Veep" is returning for a third season — she's found a much more manageable schedule.

"With 'Veep,' I'm doing 10 episodes a year and it has opened things up for me," she says. "And also this film was shot in Los Angeles, which was fabulous."

The film also gives her a chance to collaborate with writer-director Nicole Holofcener, a filmmaker known for complex and engaging female characters. Eve, Louis-

Dreyfus' single mom massage therapist who starts dating a client's ex-husband, is no different. "This is a woman who's been hijacked emotionally without almost even knowing it — by herself," Louis-Dreyfus explains. "It really just spoke to me — not that I have ever done anything that deceitful in my life, but I understand why she did it. It does intrigue me, someone who means so well doing something so terrible."

That setup paves the way for a brand of cringe humor in which Louis-Dreyfus insists she revels. "It was actually excruciating to do. I love scenes like that," she says. "I love awkward, wince-y, shame-filled moments of entertainment. I love to live there for as long as possible."

Remembering

Memories of Gandolfini

"Enough Said" marks the last film appearance of James Gandolfini, who died of a heart attack during a trip to Italy in June. Co-star Louis-Dreyfus insists the romantic comedy is a perfect tribute to both the actor and the man. "First of all, he's an outstanding actor," she says. "Secondly, James is a gentle giant. This part that he plays of Albert, as this kind and thoughtful and earnest and self-effacing fellow, is very, very close to who James Gandolfini was — much more so than Tony Soprano. He was no mafia boss, James Gandolfini. He was a dear, dear man."

10 films you might

Movies. Here's what's coming to (or is already at) your local googolplex.

2 'Rush' Having nothing to do with the 1991 narc film (nor the band), Ron Howard's latest details the rivalry between 1970s Formula One racers James Hunt (Chris Hemsworth) and Niki Lauda (Daniel Bruhl). Howard's directorial debut was the car comedy "Grand Theft Auto," so this isn't entirely new territory for him.

3 'Battle of the Year' One of those outsized dancer melodramas that crops up every now and then, this one features a character named Dante plus noted abusive lover Chris Brown.

4 'The Wizard of Oz 3-D' Exactly as director Victor Fleming and company intended, the 1939 classic has been post-converted for our age of fake extra-dimensions. Don't get your eye poked out by Margaret Hamilton's monstrous green honker.

5 'Thanks for Sharing' Mark Ruffalo, Tim Robbins and Josh Gad play recovering sex addicts working their way through a program while being tempted by the likes of Gwyneth Paltrow and Pink (in a surprisingly solid performance).

6 'Enough Said' One of James Gandolfini's final performances is in this dramedy from Nicole Holofcener ("Lovely & Amazing"), in which he engages in middle-aged courtship with masseuse Julia Louis-Dreyfus.

Must-see

1 'Prisoners' Hugh Jackman leads an all-star cast as a father whose daughter is kidnapped, so he winds up kidnapping a man (Paul Dano) he thinks is responsible (but might not be, even if played by Dano in full creep mode).

7 'After Tiller' Oh, the dinner conversations you'll have with your family when you tell them about seeing this documentary about the precious few doctors performing late-term abortions in the wake of the murder of George Tiller.

8 'Ip Man: The Final Fight' To the towering pile of films on legendary martial artist and Bruce Lee trainer Ip Man

Joe Lo Truglio has a long history playing the law, as seen on "Reno 911!" "Paul" and an episode of "Law & Order" where he was cast as "Police-man #2." He also has a deep past with ensemble comedy, starting with "The State" and in "Superbad," "Role Models" and "Drunk History." The new Fox show "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" allows him to do both, as Detective Charles Boyle, one of the bumbling (yet strangely competent) police precinct staffers, alongside Andy Samberg, Terry Crews and Andre Braugher.

It's way, way, way better than going solo. I've been very lucky. I've had the opportunity to work with an incredible amount of talented people, much more talented than myself. Lo Truglio, on working with others

How do you balance the detective side of the show with the comedy side?

The characters are good at their jobs, so it was important it looked like we knew what we were doing. The detective work gives us an arena, but it's not the center ring. The relationships are what's under the big top. I want to talk about the elephant in the room, but I feel like my circus metaphor is running amok, so I'll stop there.

Can you talk about being a part of comedy groups, rather than as a solo performer?

It's way, way, way better than going solo. I've been very lucky. I've had the opportunity to work with an incredible amount of talented people, much more talented than myself. I believe it's why I do good work. I was learning how to collaborate way back when I started with my dear friends in "The State." It was a lesson that I've carried into other projects, and I make decisions on jobs based on whom I'll be working with. "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" wasn't any different.

How is developing a character over a TV show different than a one-off character in a TV episode or in a movie?

It's new, so I'm feeling it out, but I love it. You find new things about your character as the show goes on? It's a little bit of both. You got to plant the big stuff right out of the gate: He's a grinder, he has a crush on Detective Diaz [Stephanie Beatriz], he's got no social filter. But then there's stuff that reveals why he has certain objectives, certain goals — romantically, professionally — that need to wait.

Inevitable question: How much of the show is improv?

We have terrific writers. But as [showrunners] Mike [Schur] and Dan [Goor] have said, it's crazy to have the type of funny people this show has and not improv. Most of it doesn't get in, but a surprising amount does. As far as the vibe on set, the energy — it's exactly like most of the successful comedy projects I've done. No divas, respect all around, kindness to the crew — it all adds up. It's easier to put your neck out and act like a fool if you feel safe.

Real (TV) cops

On Andre Braugher

"He's everything you'd think: engaging, professional, deeply invested in the work," says Lo Truglio. "But he's funny as hell too. He's an absolute integral part of why I think the show works. And it's because he brings legitimacy to us clowns who are playing detectives. His presence alone helps sell the fact that we're believable as cops. It rubs off on the viewer, I think. If Andre Braugher speaks, you listen, and if he's listening to somebody as if it's important, then you probably will too."

London Fashion Week

11:22 a.m. Simone Rocha

This season, the Simone Rocha girl grew up. Eschewing her innocent femininity, she was rawer, more sexual and even more desirable. Pearl-embroidered stockings and pearl-encrusted collars mixed with tulle, silk, lace and crochet create an almost ecclesiastical effect. On paper this all sounds innocent, but the lace was wet-looking and the crochet appeared almost plasticized, which gave the collection a subversive undertone. A slick, moss-green leather coat with oversized lapels paired with a silk slip and stockings in a similar hue had a particular grimy but equally lusty feel. Rocha also explored new silhouettes, such as her knee-length slip dresses, which were a departure from her full-skirted signature. Factor in a haunting finale of three models shrouded in veils and layers of tulle, and you have one of London's most evocative runway moments of the week. CHLOE MAC DONNELL

MEADHAM KIRCHHOFF
GETTY IMAGES

3:19 p.m. Meadham Kirchhoff

With a runway scattered with red and white roses and a series of broken trellises piled up at the catwalk exit, Edward Meadham and Benjamin Kirchhoff immediately set the tone for their signature romance with a dark twist. The designer duo's show is about the experience rather than just the clothes, and with a soundtrack featuring creaking doors and a heart beating — the pace quickening as each look appeared — it was an intense, almost creepy couple of minutes. But the clothes were beautiful. This season they took their technical work to the next level, with intricate beading and lace and satin stitch detailing finished to a flawless effect. In one series, tiny floral embroidered motifs were used on silk separates over which gold corset tops were layered. There was also lots of humor, with beaded teddy bear bags, graphic-cut sunglasses and boater-style hats.

CMD

5 p.m. Lucas Nascimento

It's my last show of the week. I'm exhausted, but there's been so much hype surrounding Lucas Nascimento that I can't let myself crash quite yet. Everyone who hasn't yet left for Milan is here, and for the penultimate show of the schedule, there's a promising turnout. The first look is an all-black ensemble: A pair of tailored trousers is teamed with a knitted bath towel-looking top wrapped around the body. The look is simple, but the result is stunning. Later, the same idea comes in sunshine yellow, which adds a pop to a selection of sharp shaped skirts and clean-cut coats. Dresses appear tiered thanks to the way the fabric is draped around the body, and skirts have high slits. This is minimalism at its best. Evaded from the distraction of print or decoration, it is perfectly clear that the Brazilian designer has pure talent. ALICE TATE

ALL ABOUT IUDS: THE INVISIBLE BIRTH CONTROL

Don't settle for the same-old sex stuff you knew when you had braces or pimples. Although you may have sampled different sexual positions and partners before getting comfortable with your current jam, if you haven't been equally exploratory with birth control, it may be time to upgrade to a method that better suits you and your partner's current needs. If you're ready from some straight talk about the intrauterine device (IUD), below is a chart so you can get schooled on this increasingly popular choice.

First, a heads up: Lovers for whom pregnancy prevention isn't an issue don't need it, and the device won't protect you from sexually transmitted infections unless paired with a male or female condom.

According to Guttmacher Institute, almost 1 in every 10 American women using contraception in the 1970s chose IUDs. They fell out of popularity and out of the market after a spate of miscarriages and infertility-inducing disasters. Scary stuff! Now, IUD's are back — offering better safety. More than 2 million American women use them — the highest usage rate in decades.

No one knows for sure how it works, but the IUD likely cockblocks sperm by preventing it from either entering the uterus or fertilizing the egg. A doctor inserts the T-shaped device, and it's effective as hell at preventing pregnancy. Undetectable, reversible and easy to use, once it is in, you're pretty much good to go.

I'm not going to tell you to let anyone shove a foreign object in your uterus without doing your homework. So, look below for a very quick overview to help you suss it out.

Why Scandinavian food is taking over

Trends. It goes beyond gravlax and meatballs.

With New York's first Nordic food festival, NORTH, coming up (Oct. 2-7) and new restaurants popping up like hipsters popping up indie concerts, Scandinavian food is hotter than ever. And if you ask the leading faces of New York's food scene, there is only one way for the Scandinavian trend to go — up.

"Just 18 months ago, there was really only one well-known Scandinavian restaurant in Manhattan, and that was Aquavit," says Kalle Bergman, editor-in-chief of the online food magazine Honest Cooking, which organizes NORTH. "Within the last year and a half, we have seen an influx in chefs from overseas coming to New York and opening up shops. And I believe in the near future that number will only grow. I don't think we've seen the peak of New Nordic cuisine in New York City."

Scandinavian cooking is setting in so strongly that chef Marcus Samuelsson, who was born in Ethiopia and raised in Sweden, doesn't even think to call it a trend anymore.

"Good food is good food," he says. "We will pickle and preserve. We will smoke. We will always have good seafood. Trends come and go, but if it's good quality and the technique and products are great, people start to incorporate it in their food. The food of Scandinavia has a point of view, and it has always been unique."

He points out the fact that it also helps Scandinavian dining that America looks to Scandinavia for other culture — such as fashion and music — today more than ever before, whether the import is H&M, Acne, Swedish House Mafia or Robyn.

"It's a collective. And I'm very proud of being a part of that collective narrative," Samuelsson says.

can go to any store and find 10 different olive oils from Italy. That is essentially being on the world map. Having a couple of restaurants that you can brag about, that's great, but you need more to have a global impact."

If we take a quick detour to this year's summer in the Hamptons, Samuelsson's predictions seem to be right on the mark. During the summer, Sweden was the buzzword among foodies there. Under the Swedish Culinary Summer, Swedish chefs, bartenders and brands sponsored dining and drinking events at fashionable charity events.

"Sweden has been very hot in general the last years. Why? It's quality and it's different," says Michelle Chernoff, the U.S. sales and marketing director for Xante, a Swedish cognac. According to her,

New York has been an easy market for Xante to move into due to the big interest in Sweden. But will there be a market for off-the-wall Scandinavian ingredients on the long term?

My favorite NYC restaurants, by Alain Ducasse

Dining. The
venerated chef has a top pick for any and every occasion.

Alain Ducasse's "J'aime New York" launched last year as a 10-pound coffee table book, chock full of expert picks on where to dine in our city. For those who don't feel like lugging a kettle bell-size tome around for culinary inspiration, though, come October it'll be available as an e-book. We asked the French chef — whose 26 restaurants span eight countries — to tell us the best places to eat for just about every occasion worthy of a restaurant meal. Here are some of the best:

A first date

Four & Twenty Blackbirds:

"Tucked away in Gowanus, this spot is homey and inviting, making it ideal for sharing a quiet cup of coffee and a sweet snack. The old-fashioned pies are cooked to perfection and come in a variety of seasonal flavors."

An anniversary dinner

Porter House New York:

"There's no better way to experience New York than through a steakhouse like Michael Lomonaco's Porter House. With an outstanding view of Central Park, this is a truly romantic scene."

Proposing to someone

Le Bernardin: "Not only is this one of the most dynamic restaurants in the U.S., but here Chef Eric Ripert is able to inspire his guests through the artistry of his food. The restaurant is set so that everything is exquisitely in its place — an atmosphere worthy of an occasion such as an engagement."

"J'aime New York" will soon be available as an e-book. / PROVIDED

Brunch with friends

Prune: "There is no better place to witness the ritual of brunch than this intimate spot in the East Village. Though weekend mornings guarantee a crowd, chef-owner Gabrielle Hamilton's plates are well worth the frenzy."

Dinner with your in-laws

Peasant: "Warm and welcoming, this NoLiTa spot is the perfect place to dine with family. Wood-burning ovens churn out seasonally-inspired Tuscan fare, and the smell of the food cooking over an open fire melts away any nerves."

A business lunch to woo a client

Marea: "This luxurious seafood-focused Italian hot spot overlooks Central Park, and here Michael White serves some of the best pasta in town. Manhattan's most important business moguls, fashion designers and notables spend their afternoons here, as it is always guaranteed to impress."

Catching up with an old friend

John Dory Oyster Bar:

"April Bloomfield's casual bar is a cozy corner in the Ace Hotel, where raw bar and prepared items are top-notch. Order a number of seafood plates to share and enjoy the expansive wine list."

Making new friends

Kitchen Arts & Letters: "For someone who cares about food, a trip here is a must. Dedicated to the literature of food, I can spend hours browsing through their collection of cookbooks, making it the best place to spark discussions with strangers who more than likely turn into friends."

Taking out-of-town friends

Katz's Delicatessen: "The best Jewish-style deli also happens to be the oldest. The staff piles slices of rye with old-fashioned cured pastrami and corned beef."

There's nothing natural about GMOs

Re: 'Take a kinder look at good old-fashioned GMOs' (Metro, Sept. 16)

Letter-writers Matt Brosnan and Kelton Barnsley sound like GMO spokesmen when they try to convince us that "genetic engineering is simply a much faster and more precise" form of the "selective breeding and the hybridization of plants" that farmers have been doing for centuries. What about the fact that arctic char "antifreeze protein" genes have been spliced into strawberries to give them greater resistance to freezing cold? Can Messrs. Brosnan and Barnsley explain to us how traditional farming would have hybridized strawberries with a kind of ocean fish? Please! Who are we fooling here? And, by the way, that is not an aberration, but rather a typical, in fact emblematic example of how GMOs operate.
PASQUALE G. TATO, VIA EMAIL

Matt Brosnan in totally off-base in his assertions and only adds to the inaccuracies pertaining to GMOs. There is a HUGE difference between cross-pollinating and crossbreeding versus GMOs. Crossbreeding use natural reproductive mechanisms to combine genetic material from the same or closely related species (it's why humans cannot crossbreed with animals), whereas GMOs allow for a "random" selection of genes from one organism to be inserted into the DNA of another organism. GMO tomatoes may be spliced with pig genes to prolong its growing season, this would not occur "in the natural world." Crossbreeding and cross-pollination are natural phenomenon; GMOs are manufactured by biotech companies and created in a laboratory.

Jets ready to face QB they skipped drafting NFL. E.J. Manuel was the surprising top QB pick in the 2013 draft.

Jets quarterback Geno Smith was the consensus top quarterback in the NFL Draft five months ago, a popular pick to be among the top-20 selections. The second-best quarterback in the draft was supposed to be E.J. Manuel, slotted in as a likely second-round pick.

The roles were reversed on draft night when Manuel was shockingly taken in the first round by the Bills, 23 picks ahead of Smith, who fell to the Jets in the second round. The Jets passed over Smith with both the No. 9 and the No. 13 picks in the draft.

Sunday afternoon represents an opportunity to show why the Bills were willing to defy conventional wisdom and take Manuel not just in the first round but above Smith. His transition to the NFL has been relatively smooth to date.

"The biggest thing is understanding your reads, understanding really your progression more so than your reads," Manuel said yesterday. "Stick to that, stick to the coaching. I think that's where a lot of the accuracy and having your body in line to throw the ball accurately, that really comes into play."

Although Smith might possess the bigger upside, it is Manuel who has impressed thus far in a limited sample size.

Manuel has rarely looked flustered under pressure, a stark contrast to Smith, who had three interceptions in the fourth quarter in a 13-10 loss to the Patriots last Thursday. Meanwhile, Manuel orchestrated a nine-play, 80-yard drive that ended with a 2-yard touchdown pass to Stevie Johnson to give the Bills a 24-23 win over the Panthers.

He called the win "more so a development thing for the team and the coaches" than any personal statement.

Coughlin still answering questions about Broncos

The Giants got back to work yesterday, with the Panthers clearly in their sights. But before head coach Tom Coughlin could delve into that, he was forced to rehash his thoughts on the sloppy loss last week.

"I'd like to see better play. The fact of the matter is we need to play better," Coughlin said. "Through three quarters the other day [against the Broncos], it was still a very good football game. ... Finish the game is what we've talked about [and] playing four quarters. It's a challenge for all of us to get this right. I understand the [team's] leaders want to see more fire, but all I care about is playing better."

Browns trade former top pick

In a league known for few major trades, the Browns dealt last year's No. 3 overall pick Trent Richardson to the Colts for a 2014 first-round pick. Richardson was one of very few stars on the Browns' roster, but was drafted by the previous regime.

Comparison

The sample size is small, but through two games Geno Smith does not stack up well against E.J. Manuel.

- Completions:
Smith: 39-of-73 (53.4 percent)
Manuel: 45-of-66 (68.2 percent)

- TD-INT ratio:
Smith: 1/4
Manuel: 3/1

- Sacks:
Smith: 9
Manuel: 1

- Both teams have a record of 1-1.

Richardson
practices hurt,
Coples improves

Jets rookie Sheldon Richardson was limited in practice yesterday with a shoulder injury, but head coach Rex Ryan praised the defensive end for being out there and practicing, calling him a

"tough hombre."

Richardson would not say which shoulder was hurt.

"It's fine," Richardson told Metro. "It's a stinger."

Fellow defensive lineman Quinton Coples practiced for the second straight day this week, including in drills.

"Taking it day-by-day.

The trainers and coaches tell me to go out there and try it out. So far, so good," Coples said. "It feels good. I'm just taking it one step at a time, doing what they ask me to do and move forward from there."

Coples called the decision on whether he'd play this week up to the training staff. KRISTIAN DYER

NFL power rankings | by Mike Greger

No. 1

Seahawks (2-0)

There's a new No. 1 after Seattle pummeled the 49ers and the best defense in football — that's not opinion, as the Hawks rank first in takeaways/giveaways and total defense and teams are averaging five points per game against them — made Colin Kaepernick look human. Richard Sherman is angry, too. You won't like Sherman when he's angry.

No. 8

Bengals (1-1)

If Giovani Bernard starts making plays like he did Monday night, watch out. He adds a dimension to an already explosive offense.

No. 9

Saints (2-0)

Drew Brees and Co. are back to their old tricks, dominating time of possession at 33:54 per game so far.

No. 2

Broncos (2-0)

Peyton Manning looks like a man possessed, and he has all the weapons to run the table. Monitor the Ryan Clady injury, though.

No. 5

Texans (2-0)

Echo what we said last week: The progression of Matt Schaub and the passing game makes Houston extra dangerous.

No. 10

Bears (2-0)

This is a very talented offense. They probably should have routed the Vikings. Jay Cutler has to limit his mistakes.

No. 3

49ers (1-1)

San Francisco bounces back this week. Absolutely no one can win in Seattle. The Niners must secure home-field advantage.

No. 6

Packers (1-1)

It really depends on the matchup for the Pack. It's near impossible to score more points than them, but their defense is soft.

No. 11

Chiefs (2-0)

We knew the defense was stacked. Now Andy Reid is using Jamaal Charles like he did Brian Westbrook in Philly.

No. 4

Falcons (1-1)

They're legit Super Bowl contenders if they can close out games. They've been outscored 31-14 in second halves so far.

No. 7

Patriots (2-0)

They could be the worst 2-0 team in football, and Tom Brady looks extremely frustrated with his rookie receivers.

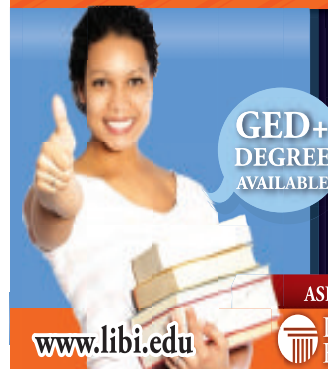

No. 12

Dolphins (2-0)

Is Ryan Tannehill (23-of-34, 319 yards, one TD) a real franchise quarterback? We're starting to buy in. New vibe in South Beach.

There is no spokesperson with a catchy phrase to remind the driver to slow down, stop eating, quit messing with the radio or pay attention to the road.
